Introduction

At its height in the early 1920s, the coal industry in Glamorgan employed nearly 180,000 people - over one in three of the working male population. Many of those tracing their ancestors in Glamorgan will therefore sooner or later come across family members who were coal miners or colliery surface workers.

Unfortunately, however, few colliery employment records have survived. Each pit kept its own records of employees, and these records were often destroyed once they were no longer needed. Only a small number of employment records have been deposited at Glamorgan Archives; they relate to collieries in Glamorgan, with some collieries in the former county of Monmouthshire featured within the larger United National Collieries Collection.

Other types of records within the collection can be used by people to trace their ancestors, such as accident and compensation registers, estate accounts, rental books, National Insurance registers, relief payment registers and explosion reports.

Please note: the information available on individuals varies between records. Some records may only give the name of a person, whilst others may give more details such as name, age, address and occupation. The information you can expect to find in each volume is given in the list below.

Starting your coalfield family history research

Colliery Workers

Finding out which colliery your ancestor worked in can be difficult as there were hundreds of mines across south Wales. If you have an address or village name from your research then it is possible to find the local collieries where they may have worked using old Ordnance Survey maps of the area and online resources, such as the The List of Historic Place Names of Wales, National Library of Scotland's Ordnance Survey collection, The Coal Authority website and Old Maps Online.

Identifying a potential colliery or collieries where an ancestor might have worked is essential as where records have survived they are likely to have been arranged by the name of the colliery. Alongside the records that relate to individual collieries, there are also records that contain information on staff or people that relate to more than one colliery, wide geographic area or to non-colliery based employees such as administrative and farm staff.

Using address information to find local collieries will probably be sufficient for researching ancestors from the 19th and early 20th centuries as it is likely that your ancestors walked to work each day. As the availability of public and private transport increased during the latter part of the 20th century this information may not be enough as people travelled further to work.

Once you have established which mine(s) your ancestor may have worked in you will need to check to see if any information is held for those particular collieries at the archive.

This guide lists documents relevant to coalfield family history research, arranged by location of the colliery and alphabetically by valley/area. The first table within the document summarises the valleys and the collieries within each valley for which we hold records containing information on individuals. A full list of the documents immediately follows as well as additional sources that can be used to get a more general impression of life in the south Wales coalfield. Please note that this list is not exhaustive and there may be other material held at Glamorgan Archives relevant to your coalfield family history research.

Colliery Owners

Many coal mines in Glamorgan in the 19th century were very small and often short-lived. It is rare for any records relating to these mines to have survived. However, if you find an ancestor described as a 'mine owner' or 'colliery proprietor', perhaps on a census return, you may be able to find out the name and location of the coal mine he owned by looking at the following publications:

- South Wales Coal Annual, 1903-1937 (held at Glamorgan Archives, D3)
- Hunt, Robert, Mineral Statistics, published annually, 1853-1881 (incomplete set held at Cardiff Library)
- Lists of Mines, published annually by HMSO (incomplete set held at Cardiff Library)
- The Colliery Year Book and Trades Directory. Began publishing in 1922 and was published annually until 1964 when it became a directory for the coal distributive trade. It listed all collieries in production, their location, numbers of workers employed and seams worked (Held at the National Museum of Wales)
- Guide to the Coalfields published annually by the Colliery Guardian. As well as covering national organisation and subsidiary industries, these are divided into sections dealing with the collieries in an NCB or British Coal administrative area. A section on small, licensed mines is also included (Held at the National Museum of Wales)
- Durham Mining Museum website <http://dmm.org.uk/mindex.htm>, transcriptions from various sources relating to coal mining (including information from Lists of Mines, Mines Inspectors Reports and Colliery Year Book). Includes references to Welsh collieries.

Coroner's Records \(CORC\)

Coroner's Records can be used to find out more about fatal accidents and deaths caused by industrial disease. Coroner's Records include registers of deaths reported to coroner 1954-1972 and coroner's papers, 1951-1971. Coroner's papers comprise monthly files containing inquest records, post mortem reports, death notices, pneumoconiosis reports, witness statements and photographs. Written permission from the coroner's office is required before the records can be consulted.

Reports of inquests can appear in local and national newspapers.

Additional Sources held at Glamorgan Archives

Once you have found your ancestor (or if you can't find them, but are sure they worked within the coal industry), Glamorgan Archives is a great place to delve into records that set the scene of the south Wales coalfield. Here are a few record series to get you started:

Fernhill Colliery Records \(D1100\)

A collection of miscellaneous documents relating specifically to Fernhill Colliery in the Rhondda Valley. This collection is great for setting the scene of the coal industry, with papers on subjects such as the colliery band, pithead baths and wages.

Ocean and National Magazines \(D1400/9\)

These colliery magazines from the late 1920s and 1930s document life in the south Wales coalfield. They feature news from the following collieries: Maindy, Park and Dare, Western, Eastern, Garw, Lady Windsor, Deep Navigation, Avon, Bute Merthyr, Abergorky, National, Risca Colliery, Nine Mile Point. These magazines are full of contributions from workers, articles relevant to the coal industry and stories about local people and their lives. Through articles and pieces about colliery eisteddfods, summer camps, wedding announcements and colliery bands, we really do get a feeling of a great community spirit and the way of life within the coalfield.

Photographic collections \(DNCB/14\)

With over 3000 negatives in the collection, the National Coal Board photographic archive is an amazing resource for those interested in finding out what individual collieries looked like above and below ground. There are over 130 collieries represented in the negative collection. The majority of slides shows scenes above and below ground and give a snapshot of colliery redevelopment under the National Coal Board in the 1950s. Other colliery photographic collections include those of John Cornwell, John O'Sullivan and Leslie Price.

Coal Industry Newspaper cuttings \(DNCB/15/6\)

Although a lot of newspaper material is now available online, the advantage of these kinds of volumes is that they bring material on the same subject together. 14 of the volumes within the collection relate to strikes and stoppages, mainly the Tonypandy Riots of 1910-1911. Other volumes of newspaper cuttings within the collection concern the provision of social welfare for miners, including the opening of workmen's institutes and pithead baths, adding further background to life in colliery town and villages.
