

Appendix II – Researcher findings

1) Michael Jonas

Introduction

Michael undertook research into estate records at Glamorgan Archives, with a particular focus on material connected to the transatlantic slave trade. His work focussed on the records of the Mathew Family of St Kew, Cornwall, and the Caribbean Islands (ref. DMW).

Findings

There is something to be said of the skill required to decipher the handwriting used in these documents, which naturally varies wildly in complexity and legibility. It could take weeks of staring for long stretches at a particular construction of feather-pen strokes, the ink often faded, before a 'Eureka' moment of understanding previously hidden meaning and context. It helps to compare the letters with other instances in known words; Daniel Mathews was, amongst other things, terrible at dotting his i's and worse at crossing his t's. Some words remained indecipherable.

Of particular interest is the purchase of a Tobago plantation estate by Daniel Mathews and the resulting annual accounts (refs. DMW14, 39 and 41). Alongside the routine purchases of the food, items and labour required for the efficient running of a New World plantation, and inserted amongst the bric-a-brac and minutia of everyday living, are the names (given by the slave owners), roles, and prices of enslaved Africans and their descendants.

Throughout the documents, the terms 'negro' and 'slave' are used synonymously, and such interchangeability would have helped, in the minds of contemporary white people, to cement the relationship between blackness and subordination/ inferiority. Where necessary, whiteness is specified for clarity: although a servant, the person may not be 'negro', demanding the explanatory term, 'white servant', even though this should be obvious from the fact of payment, as 'negroes' and 'slaves' are never paid, but only either purchased, appraised, rented, or sold. For example, the clarification might be made that a visiting doctor treated '100 + slaves and 1 white servant', where 'white' is used to modify 'servant', while 'negro slave' would be redundant. In this way, whiteness is therefore used in contradistinction to 'slave'.

The Tobago estate, sold by Joshua Steele for fifteen thousand pounds sterling, was sold separately to the slaves and livestock, but as part of an overall deal. Links to other slaveowner families can be made, such as with the purchase of 'new slaves' from the firm Willock & Morson in 1770, and from William Livingston – 'new' slaves being enslaved people that have been brought freshly from the African continent, i.e. 'unseasoned'.

Omitting the dates and prices in Sterling, a 1771 excerpt from every page might read:

*41 Bushels Corn
13 x 8 feet White Pine Boards
6 New Negro Men
4 Ditto Women ('Ditto' instead of rewriting 'New Negro')
87 Bushels Salt*

Then again, in 1772:

*One Barrel Jam
41 Bushels Corn
22 Bushels Ditto
48 Bushels Corn
2 New Negro Men, One Woman & 2 boys
23 Bushels Corn*

Although difficult to piece together, the negro men, women and boys might be named, as in this appraisal dated August 4, 1771, where the value of each item in Sterling has been omitted:

To Plantation DCM for the following Slaves & Cows sent this Estate in Tobago this day and appraised as follows:

*Andrew, a field negro subject to convulsions
Jacob, a field negro and Boiler
John, a field negro
Sherry, [indecipherable]
Mary Congo, superannuated [elderly] and carried without at the request of Jacob
3 Cows*

And again, on December 11, 1771, but with the skill levels of the enslaved people emphasised:

To Plantation DCM for the following Slaves sent this Estate in Tobago this day and appraised as follows:

*Cuffy, a Mason, very good but old
Guy, Ditto, middling, young
Quashey, a Cooper,
Quamina, a good Caster & very excellent negro
Pyanna, a Gardener
Cranky, a good field negro, able and constant
Cubba, a field negro, weakly*

Wallie, a boy
Cupid, Ditto
Phibba, a girl

Names are assigned arbitrarily, pet-like, sometimes biblical (Samson, Jacob, Mary), sometimes classical (Cupid), sometimes not (Peggy, Joe, Cuffy, Cranky). Carpenters, masons, blacksmiths, seamstresses and apprentices, skilled slaves were routinely hired from other plantations, often for months at a time; Amelia and Delia (ref. DMW37 p.12) were hired for four years, which could have meant time spent apart from their own children and family. However, there are examples of enslaved men being sold along with their wives.

The work of white indentured servants is occasionally specified and their wages calculated (ref. DMW37 p.18). For larger jobs, such as field clearance and building construction, slaves would be hired by the hundreds, and even thousands, from surrounding plantations, as in this 1772 entry:

By Plantation DCM for 500 Red Oak Slaves
1500 Red Oak Slaves
1000 Hickory Hoops
A Black Horse

As with estates and land ownership, taxes were paid on enslaved people, so that as well as 184 acres @ £15.45 per acre, Mathews paid tax for the year 1771-72 on 195 enslaved people @ £210.45 per negro. Generally, younger enslaved people had higher value than older, and males more than females, with children worth the least whether boy or girl. However, it was possible to purchase enslaved people at reduced rates, if evidently sickly or infirm (also indicated by the terms 'consumptive' and 'dropsical'). Further, enslaved people could be bought at sale prices, such as when the police / bailiffs of the day, referred to as Marshalls, would enforce debt collection with the removal of property, as in this case:

One negro man named Sandy bought by Stewart Macvey [an overseer] at the Marshall's Sale of the effects of William Snaito and placed by him on Constitution Hill Estate July 14th, 1770, and carried up to the Tobago Estate January 31st, 1771.

Some provision for the enslaved is evident, with entries for the purchase of 'negro clothes' and 'negro knives'. One entry accounts for payment of a tutor, who taught an unnamed mulatto boy to 'read and write', which was common practice for the mixed-race children of plantation owners who forced themselves upon enslaved women. Although the boy would legally be a slave, on the basis of his mother's station, he could probably expect superior treatment to field slaves, who would invariably be darker-skinned and have little need of reading and writing.

Resistance

The Provost Marshall was also paid for the jail fees of Cambridge and Diamond, two newly enslaved men, covering their commitment and release. That they were severely punished by Daniel Mathews for their infraction is doubtless. Multiple references are made to the destruction of property caused during the insurrection of 1770-1774. These rebellions were instigated by another enslaved man named Sandy, who stabbed his master, Stuart Hall, after the former was severely whipped at the pleasure of the latter. An assessment of the property involved the need to erect further 'negro houses' due to the destruction caused during the rebellions, as the enslaved were currently obliged to lodge with the white servants, although the contention given is 'overcrowding' rather than impropriety.

At risk of horrendous punishment, enslaved people nevertheless resisted in many different ways that were within their power, and it is gratifying to see examples of resistance, as in these 1772 entries:

For the hire of the mulatto boy Daniel for 3 months 7 days

This is soon followed by:

For the following articles stolen by the mulatto boy Daniel belonging to this plantation, who was then employed by said plantation as a tailor (linen amounting to £27).

An amount was paid for an unstated number of 'Negroes sent off or Dead' (ref. DMW44):

99	negroes from Antigua	5520
12	mules	252
3	Cowes	39.15 [best guess]
22	oxen	352
	Sundries	37.10
		Sterling £6201.5
	Negroes sent off or Dead	Sterl. 573.5

The author's calculations reveal negroes from Antigua to be valued at roughly two and a half mules, with ten or eleven of them absent. Why would a slave be 'sent off'? How did they die? Did they attempt to escape and were murdered in the act? Or were they unable to survive the journey?

Known as 'drapetomania', or the psychological condition of needing to run away, which was thought to particularly affect enslaved people who attempted to escape their captivity, one curious entry hints at the fate of an enslaved person who ran away:

Abba's Nanny, a field negro, but a Runnaway

Why would one use a field negro as a nanny? Does this ambiguous assessment mean that Abba's Nanny was initially a field negro before running away; or that Abba's Nanny maintained her (or his) auspicious role until attempting escape, at which point they were demoted to field negro? In any event, that Abba's Nanny was recaptured inspires the fervent desire that they lived up to their reputation and again ran away, this time to freedom.

2) Myya Helm

Introduction

Myya's research focussed on the coal industry. She explored the coal collections at Glamorgan Archives, coupled with other sources such as census returns, newspaper articles and court records, to find evidence of Black coal miners working in the mines of South Wales.

Findings

A) James Edwin

James Edwin was a Jamaican collier hewer born in 1876. He was employed at United National Collieries, Risca, in the Five Feet Seam from 1916 to at least 1924. He lived at 29 Grove Rd, Risca, Monmouthshire. His wife's name is Mary Allen, born in 1886 in Mynyddislwyn, Monmouthshire. His children as of 1921 are as follows: Sarah Jane, born in 1906 in Risca; Emmeline, born in 1910 in Risca, and James, born in 1914 in Risca.

PONTYPRIDD MURDER

A Man of Colour on Trial

Verdict of "Guilty."

DEATH SENTENCE.

At the Glamorgan Summer Assizes at Swansea on Thursday (before Mr. Justice Grantham) William Augustus Lacey, a coloured miner, aged 29, was indicted for that he feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought did kill and murder Pauline Lacey, his wife, on the 6th of July last at Pontypridd. There was a further indictment for murder on the Coroner's inquisition.

The trial created less public excitement and interest than is usually seen on like occasions in the precincts of the Assize Courts, although the murdered woman was a native of the town, and had not long ago been married at Port Tennant to the prisoner. Hence the crowd who lined the railings of the courtyard was not large. The court arrangements were excellent and only those who could show some claim were admitted. Nevertheless the court was well though not uncomfortably filled when the Judge at 10.35 arrived and took his seat.

While the public were awaiting the arrival of the Judge the report circulated that it was likely that the prisoner would be called to give evidence on his own behalf, and hence there were anticipations of scenes of an even more sensational character than those witnessed before the magistrates at Pontypridd.

Counsel were—For the Crown, Mr S. T. Evans, M.P., and Mr Vaughan Williams (instructed by Mr J. A. Hughes, of Barry), and for the defence Mr Bowen Rowlands, Q.C., and Mr A. C. Thomas (instructed by Mr W. R. Davies, of Pontypridd).

PRISONER IN THE DOCK.

"Put up William Augustus Lacey," commanded the Hon. Stephen Coleridge, as clerk of arraigns, as the Judge took his seat. Then amidst the expectant gaze of those in court the prisoner ascended the stairs leading from the cells to the dock and calmly advanced to the bar. He is a good-looking man, and as he composedly stood, with scrupulously kept hair and a tidy suit of blue serge, he made a distinct impression on all present.

As the charge was read out to him he inclined his head to the right as though hard of hearing, and in response first shook his head and then said in a firm distinct voice, "Not guilty, sir." Then there was a diversion while a reserve jury was called, and while this formality was being gone through the prisoner was accommodated with a chair.

25 Aug. 1900.	Fracture dislocation of the neck.	The deceased was a Coloured man, on Thursday 2nd August 1900. He was tried at Swansea assizes before Justice Bingham, and sentenced to death for the Murder of his wife Pauline Lacey, at Pontypridd on 6th July 1900. John Wood, Chief Warden, acting for the Governor of H. M. Prison Cardiff, "Captain Schyler," give evidence that the sentence of death was carried out at 8 AM on 21st August 1900, in due course of the law, by Mr. Billington, the Public executioner. D. J. D. Williams, deputy Medical Officer of the prison, stated that he was present at the execution of the condemned man Lacey, and was in his opinion that death was instantaneous, and the immediate cause of death was fracture dislocation of the neck. The jury asked no questions of the witnesses, returned the verdict finding that deceased Lacey was indicted and convicted of the murder of Pauline Lacey, and that judgment of death was duly carried out. W. Lacey, the Pontypridd murderer, was executed at Cardiff Gaol on Tuesday morning. Billington was the executioner, and he was assisted by his son. Lacey bore himself with the utmost fortitude, and went to the scaffold without uttering a word. The drop given was 7ft. 4in., and death appeared to have been instantaneous. The execution was in charge of Mr. David Isaacs (under-sheriff of Glamorgan), who was acting as high-sheriff in the place of Sir R. A. Morris, and Mr. George Isaacs was present as acting under-sheriff. Chief-warder J. Wood was present as acting governor of the goal, in the absence of Captain Schuyler. Those also present were Father Van Den Heuvel, who had attended Lacey since his condemnation; Dr. J. D. Williams (deputy medical officer of the gaol), and Alderman T. Windsor Jacobs, who attended as a visiting magistrate.

GELLYGAER SCENE.

COLOURED MAN SENT TO PRISON.

A scene in Oxford-street, Gellygaer, had a sequel at the Glamorgan Assizes, when Elsie Alfred Langford, aged 42, a coloured collier, was charged with wounding Joseph Richards, of Glyndwr-road, Gellygaer, with intent to cause him grievous bodily harm. Langford pleaded not guilty.

Mr. Ellis Lloyd (instructed by Mr. D. J. Parry, Cardiff) prosecuted, and Mr. H. H. Roskin (instructed by Mr. D. J. Treasure, Pengam) defended.

The jury found Langford "guilty under great provocation."

Langford was told by the judge that the use of a razor could not be allowed in any civilised community. But for the jury's opinion as to provocation, the sentence would have been one of penal servitude; because of it, the sentence would be eighteen months' hard labour.

ALLEGED STABBING.

COLOURED MAN REMANDED AT BARGOED.

At a special court at Bargoed on Friday (before Mr. Gus Jones), John Henry Davies, miner, a coloured man, of Gellygaer-road, Gellygaer, was charged with intent to do grievous bodily harm to Oval Gladstone Charles on Saturday afternoon last.

No evidence was tendered, and on the application of Police Inspector Herbert Evans, the accused was remanded in custody and will be brought before the Bargoed magistrates to-day (Friday).

It is alleged that Charles was stabbed with a knife on the hip and was attended to by Dr. Cleary. He is now reported to be progressing favourably.
